

BOXERS WOULD EASILY OUTCLASS WRESTLERS IN MIXED BOUTS

CLASH BETWEEN DEMPSEY AND STRANGLER ED LEWIS WOULD BE JOKE CONTEST

Advantage Has Always Been With Boxers in Matches With Wrestlers and Jiu Jitsu Artists—How McCoy Defeated Savate Champion in France.

By Robert Edgren.

FOR a couple of months sporting circles all over the country have been discussing the old question about how a boxer and a wrestler would come out if matched to "fight" each other with their opposing methods. Strangler Lewis, the wrestling champion, has obtained much needed advertising by "challenging" Jack Dempsey, boxing champion. The old wrestling game has been rather slow of late and needs newspaper space to keep it going. Dempsey, having already achieved so much knockout reputation that he is without work in his specialty, has paid little attention to Lewis, whose offers of stakes or side bets have increased as the likelihood of their acceptance dwindles.

Now let us have the real truth about a boxer-wrestler contest. In the first place, such a contest is impossible. There's no more sense in it than in a championship "battle" between a chess player and a poker player, each using his own implements and technique, one with a chess board and chess men and chess moves, and the other with a deck of cards and a stack of chips.

A boxer does his work while on his feet. A wrestler isn't fairly in action until on his hands and knees. In a "contest" between a boxer and a wrestler, the wrestler would need only to lie down on the floor if he was in trouble, when he'd be in a position peculiar to his own game and fairly safe from a boxer's attack. To get at him the boxer would have to give up boxing and play the wrestler's game.

But if the wrestler went to the floor, according to boxing rules, he would be down and subject to a ten-second count.

Of course, a wrestler-boxer contest might be just a rough-house fight, with no rules, the survivor to be the winner. Such a contest couldn't be held in this country, except illegally and in private, like the old-time prize fights. No boxer or wrestler with any regard for his reputation would take part in such a contest.

MCVEY AND THE JIU JITSU EXPERT.

Now consider what might happen in a grappler-boxer battle. Several years ago when Sam McVey and Sam Langford were fighting each other return matches down in Australia, Sam McVey was challenged to a mixed match by a white man who had studied jiu jitsu several years in Japan and had been awarded first class honors in that country.

The order of the contest was that there were to be three rounds of three to decide the winner. Each man was to use any fighting method at his command, hit, kick, gouge, twist joints—the only condition being that either could "resign" if he helps.

Jiu jitsu is a scientifically studied and highly developed system combining wrestling and other fighting methods. The grips and holds are elaborations of present wrestling methods at which Lewis, for example, is adept. As a fighting art jiu jitsu is far more effective than wrestling.

In the first bout the jiu-jitsu expert got McVey's arm in a twist from which he couldn't escape, and he resigned. Up to this point his "arm" thought the match was a joke. He was laughing and making no attempt to fight. But now he was mad.

Coming out for the second bout McVey danced around and waited for an opening. As the jiu-jitsu man reached for a grip Sam whipped a right hand over to his chin and knocked him down. Before he could move Sam jumped on him, grabbed both his ears and banged his head on the floor. That ended the match. The jiu-jitsu expert was so completely knocked out that he was unable to come back for the third bout, and he was so thoroughly convinced that he didn't ask for a return match, although he did admit a little. He said he didn't expect Sam to use anything as crude as an ear-hold for a finisher, and anyway he had just recovered from an attack of malaria.

GOOD, STRONG BOXER WOULD HAVE LITTLE TROUBLE KNOCKING OUT WRESTLER.

Taking Dempsey as a boxer type—any boxer like Dempsey would have little trouble knocking out a wrestler. Jack footwork, a keen eye for an opening, and a terrific punch such as Dempsey carries in either hand would settle a match in a jiffy.

Wrestlers may look fast when opposed to wrestlers but compared to boxers they are slow as a truck being a racing car. Wrestling makes men slow. Wrestling is an exercise in which muscles are submitted to long strains that take away all of the snappy, sudden action that is used in boxing. Wrestling ruins a boxer by making him too slow to box. There isn't a case on record of any man who was a first-class boxer and a first-class wrestler at the same time. Tom Sharkey lost his fighting speed when he tried to become a wrestler. Gunner Moir, once a wrestler, became boxing champion of England. But he was much too slow to be a great fighter. Tommy Burns, at 165 pounds, easily knocked him out. Bombardier Wells, fast and a flashy boxer, knocked Moir out too. Moir tried to induce Georges Hackenschmidt to become a boxer. Hack thought well of the idea and trained for months but never entered the boxing ring in a contest. He was remarkably fast as a wrestler but confided to me that he found himself lacking in punching speed.

The tugging, straining effort of wrestling on the mat seems to unfit them for taking such blows as boxers strike. Years ago a huge fellow known as Yank Kenny, who had become a fairly good wrestler, tried to box. He was a bigger man than Jeffries and looked like a world beater. But he couldn't take a crack on the chin. In 1901 he wound up his fighting career in the Klondike. Frank Slavin, an old-time boxer who had retired from the ring and was then forty-one years old, knocked Yank out in three rounds.

Frank Gotch, world's champion wrestler and a great man on the mat, thought he'd go after the boxing championship after Jeffries retired. He trained a long time and made his start in Alaska, and old Slavin knocked Gotch for a goal. Gotch couldn't take a punch on the chin, although he could stand the roughing of his own game for hours at a stretch. Gotch and Doc Roller, another wrestler with ambition to become a boxer, met in the ring. People who saw the contest say it was one of the funniest ever seen in a ring. Both men could have wrestled all night but after two or three rounds of boxing both were winded, groggy and reeling, both swinging slow, heavy blows that neither could avoid. Both gave up boxing thereafter.

WHAT FITZ DID TO WRESTLER IN TRAINING.

A quarter of a century ago, Ernest Roebor was a great wrestler. He was a short, thick-set, stocky fellow with no neck and a head like a bullet, perfectly built for his own game. He trained Bob Fitzsimmons for the championship fight with Corbett at Carson in 1907. Fitz kidded Roebor along, and Ernest thought he was beating Fitz in the training quarters every day. He swelled with ambition to become heavyweight boxing champion and began to talk about what he could do to any of the fighters. He planned starting a ring career after the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight. Perhaps it was a kindness of heart that Bob intended. Or perhaps it was one of his practical jokes. I was in Bob's gymnasium a couple of days before the big fight, sole spectator of the training that day, when Bob told Roebor to come at him and try his best to knock him out.

Roebor plunged in headlong, arms swinging like a windmill, and Fitz slipped around him unscathed. After a minute or so Fitz turned grinning to me and held up his right hand with a motion indicating that he wanted me to watch closely. As Roebor plunged, head down, Fitz lifted his right elbow and deliberately hit Roebor on top of the head with his right fist. Roebor fell on his face, knocked as cold as if struck with a hammer.

Falling to revive him, Fitz took him by the back of the head and rubbed his head with a foolish grin. As for Fitz, he broke the first knuckle of his right hand with that punch, and fought Corbett with a broken hand two days later. But he concealed the injury so well that no one knew it until after the fight. Fitz swung many a wild right at Corbett that 17th of March that he never intended to land, and knocked Corbett out with his left hand.

MAN SKILLED IN USE OF FISTS HARD TO BEAT.

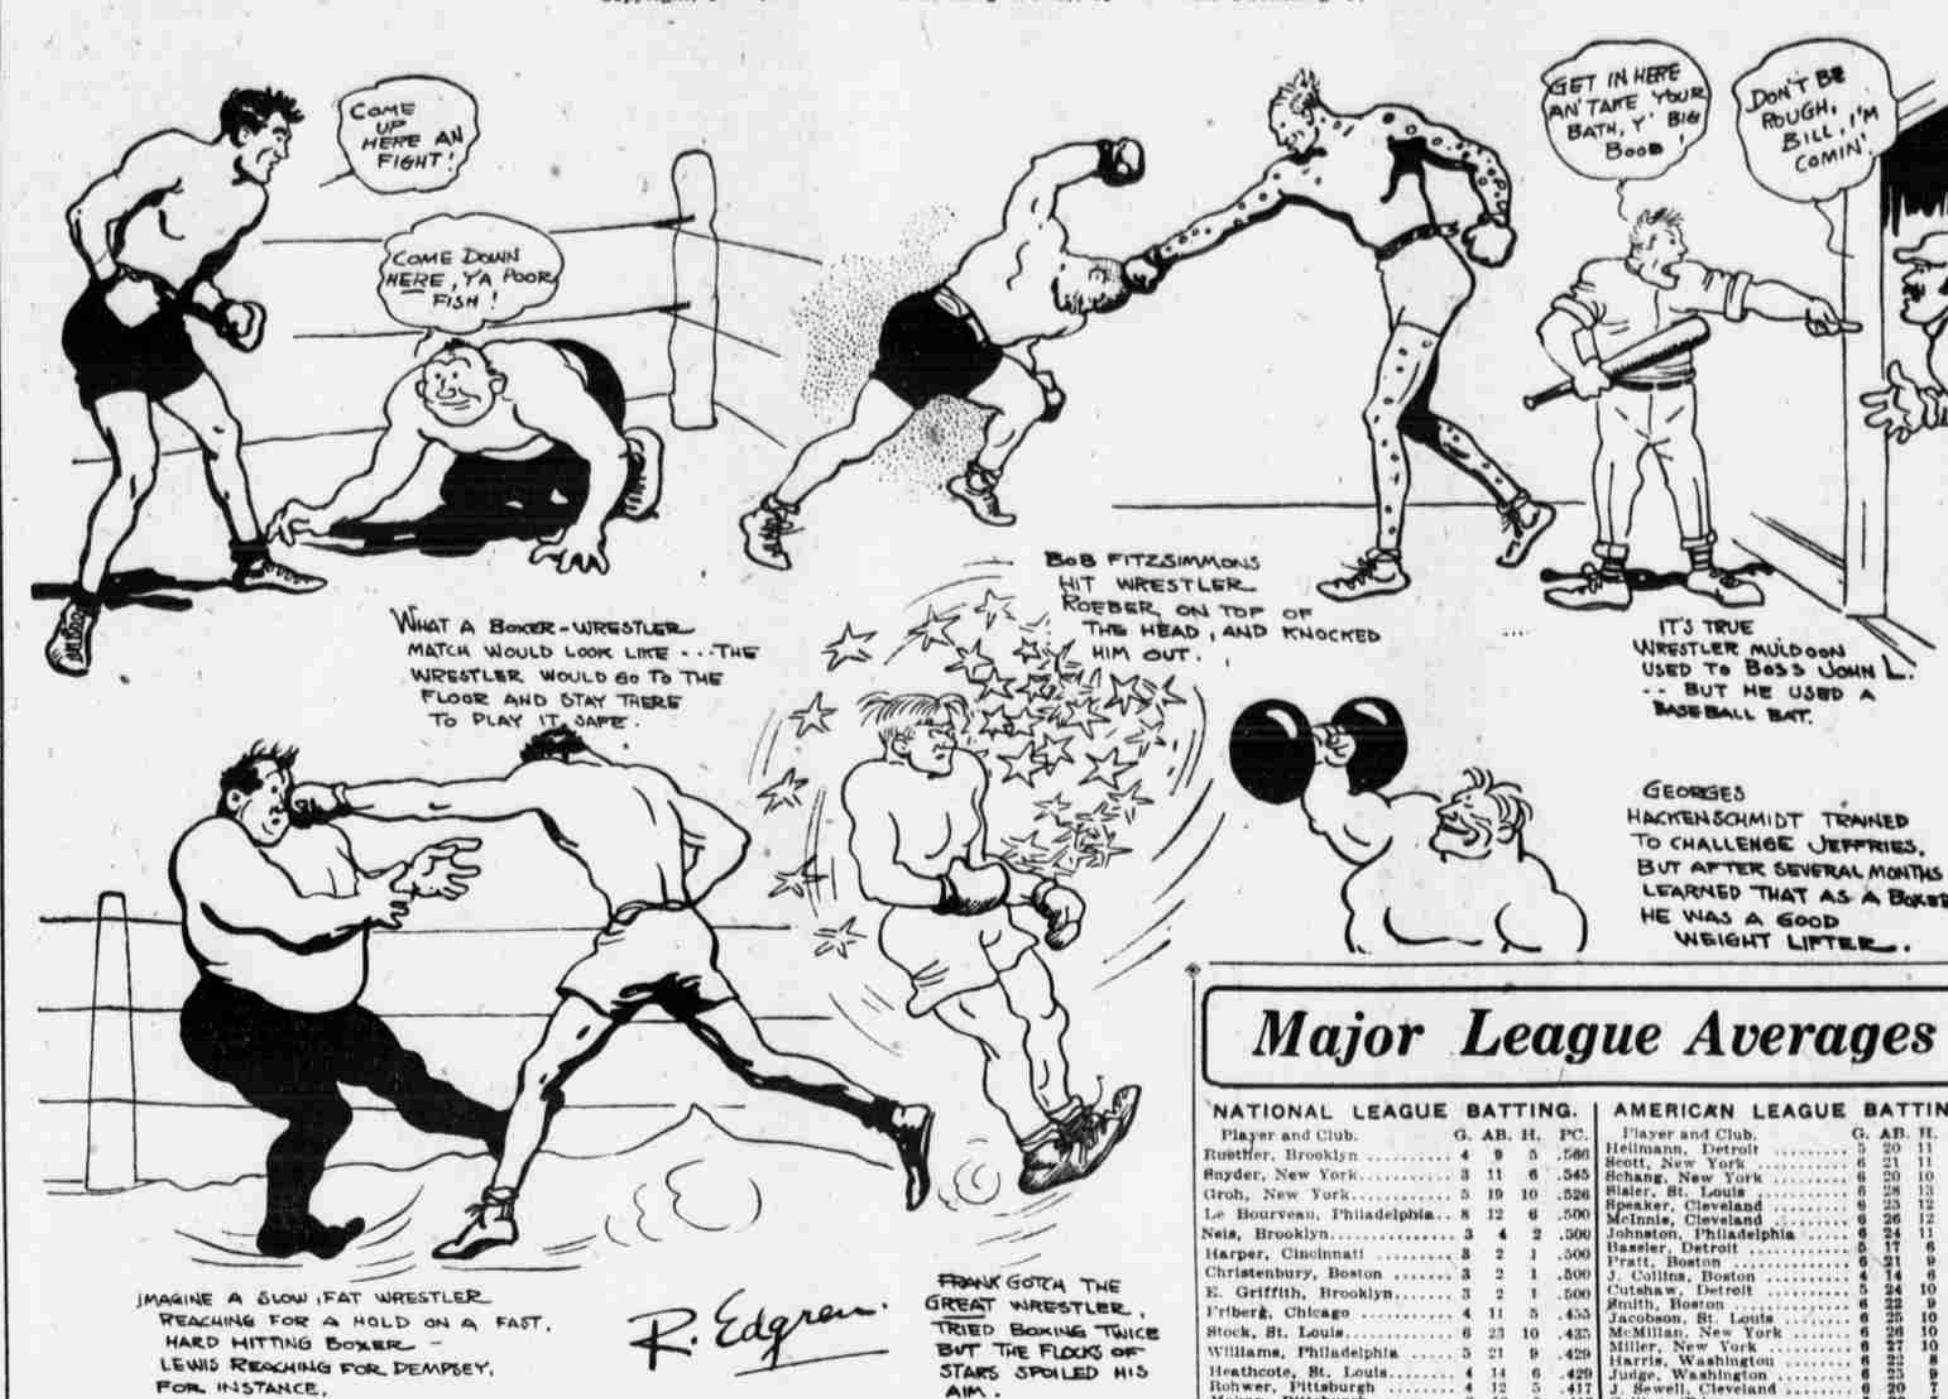

Wrestling and jiu jitsu are great stuff on the floor, but not so good when the men are moving around on their feet. I remember one night years ago in San Francisco when there was a discussion going on about what a poor chance a boxer would have with a jiu jitsu expert. A rough and tough heavyweight from South of the Slot thought he'd try it out. That evening he created a sensation by walking into a Japanese restaurant and picking a quarrel with eight Japanese, decorating the floor with them one by one. There are few Japanese who don't know something about jiu jitsu. I've often wondered how the boxer got away with it—but he did.

Must have been the suddenness of the affair, for otherwise the roughneck would surely have been killed. Still, although not commensurate, the expert showed that skilled use of the fists is hard to beat as a fighting method.

'Honest Man' of 'Black Sox,' Outlaw Now. Pitching Semi-Pro. at $17,500 a Season

He Wouldn't "Throw Games" in Famous World Series, but Organized Baseball Coldly Turned Down Demands of Deserved Increase in Salary.

By Robert Boyd.

WHEN Little Dickie Kerr refused to cast his lot with the notorious crew that wrecked the 1919 championship team of Kid Gleason's White Sox, he became the idol of the nation. Kerr would go on winning while his infidel and outfield were crossing him and trying to throw games. The importance of Little Dickie's winnings was never really appreciated until six men on the now ill-fated "Black Sox" stated this in a confession later.

But Dickie says to-day the deeds of yesterday are soon forgotten, for the Charley Harvey, the fight manager who is piloting the flaccid fortunes of Ted (Kid) Lewis, light-heavyweight champion of America, is leaving for Europe aboard the Mauritania next Tuesday. He is bound for London, where on May 11 at the Olympia, the Madison Square Garden of the British Capital, Lewis is scheduled to meet Georges Carpentier, light-heavyweight champion of Europe, for the world's title in that weight.

The match between Lewis and Carpentier is attracting a great deal of international interest. Lewis is not a stranger to London fight fans. He has fought there many times and is quite a favorite with his countrymen. In fact he is now the holder of three of Great Britain's titles, namely, the welterweight, middleweight and light-heavyweight. As for Carpentier, well, he always has his Frenchmen to rely upon for support.

But to get back to Charley Harvey. For some time now Gene Tunney, the local fighter of Greenwich Village, and his manager Doc Barley, have been spreading the report throughout the breadth and length of this country, modestly proclaiming that Gene was the light-heavyweight champion of America.

This afternoon Harvey gave The Evening World the following statement on the subject: "Before leaving for London, there are a few things that I would like to clear up. I feel that the public is entitled to know the truth about the light heavyweight championship of America. Tunney has been claiming the title on the strength of his victory over Battling Levinaky. The truth of the matter is that at the time Tunney clean, honorable idol of the seasons of 1920 and 1921—placed on a pedestal as an ideal for the professional baseball player of the land—Dickie today is an outlaw. In the office of the High Commissioner of baseball, Kenesaw Mountain Landis, a big black mark is placed against the name of Richard Kerr, and before he is eligible to play with the White Sox, to whom he was so devoted and faithful, he must apply for reinstatement and face the strong arm of organized baseball's law like a wayward son or a fugitive. In baseball Kerr is looked upon very much like a wayward son or a fugitive. In baseball Kerr is looked upon very much like the man in civil life who transgresses the law.

And here is Little Dickie's story. He wanted more money, for he was one of the five best pitchers in the Ban Johnson Circuit and very much underpaid. Even some of the twirlers who were rated far below Kerr in pitching ability were pulling down and Levinaky fought, the latter had no championship to lose. "As everyone remembers, or as can be discovered by the simple expedient of consulting the records, Levinaky lost on a foul to Boyo McCormick in seven rounds at Portland, Ore. This automatically transferred the title to McCormick. Lewis knocked McCormick out in fourteen rounds in Royal Albert Hall, London, last November, which gave Ted a clear title to the championship of America.

"And as for Tunney, he did not meet Levinaky until the latter had been defeated by McCormick. How he can honestly lay claim to the championship is more than I can figure out. "All close followers of ring events know the situation already, but I considered it my duty to issue this statement in order to clear the point up for the general public.

"As for Lewis, he knows that he is the legitimate holder of the title, and the only thing that is occupying his mind at present is his conditioning for the battle of his career, the fight with Georges Carpentier. He is working hard and he realizes that much depends on the outcome of his battle with the Frenchman."

The bout between Lewis and Carpentier is being promoted by Major J. Arnold Wilson, a well known sportsman and now the chief fight promoter in Great Britain. The Olympia is one of the largest arenas in Europe with a seating capacity almost twice as great as that of Madison Square Garden here. Carpentier is already in London and is training at Maidenhead, where Frank Moran prepared for his fight with Beckett. He is a 3 to 1 favorite over Lewis in the betting, but he automatically shed himself out of organized boxing. All the fans who know Kerr were shocked at his rash act, above all the players, they least expected it from Little Dickie. Many of the players in a fanning beat that afternoon doubted he was getting $17,500, as semi-professional teams are not able to pay such an enormous salary.

"Dick" Kerr, a Baseball Idol, Literally Forced Off Big Circuit and Blacklisted Because He Wouldn't Take Salary Comiskey Offered Him.

twice what he was and he asked for an increase.

So here you have Little Dickie. The name White Sox no more adorns the front of his uniform. Instead of the team he was so faithful to, the name City Hall reads across his little chest.

Once the hero and idol of the Nation and a man among a motley band of traitors of the National game, he is an outlaw to-day. But there was nothing unhanding about the way he became an outlaw. He had no pillows to look under, no easy pitching so the other team could win. He is an honest, ineligible player. There is a black mark against his name in the baseball headquarters of Chicago.

But Little Dickie has a few little babies at home and that is the reason he will tell you, if you should ask him to-day, why he stepped down from his pedestal of idealism where the fandom of the Nation placed him following the exposure of the World Series of 1919 between the White Sox and Cincinnati Reds.

In Chicago Charles Comiskey, the Old Roman, runs the club. Kid Gleason is the manager, nominally, and that's all. He answers and acts to and from the orders of Comiskey. Comiskey did not think Kerr was entitled to the $17,500 he asked under the terms of his new contract and Gleason thought otherwise.

Gleason's thinking did not do any good.

The Kid asked Dick to visit the training camp down in the south this spring and see if he could not come to terms as the White Sox club to-day lacks quite a little major league class and it is in need of pitching strength. Dick sat in the hotel lobby and talked at length with Gleason and at the conclusion of their conversation Gleason could offer him nothing except that he would pay him some money out of his own salary, which Kerr refused to accept. Dick did not want to leave the big leagues where it is such a favorite as his paying his own fare down South to try to agree on terms to attest.
